

Rolled Rose

Materials Needed

Any size ribbon and any kind like grosgrain or silk, etc., approx. 20" more if you would like a fuller rose. It's always best to cut your ribbon longer because you can always cut off the excess but you can't add on once you get your rolled rose going!

Needle and Thread

If you would like to make the Rolled Rose that I am making here, you will need 1/4" of silk mauve ribbon.

'It's all about the crease!' Keep on creasing your ribbon well as you go along.

Have your needle already threaded because once you start rolling your rose you can't put it down unless you hold it with some straight pins or it will fall apart on you.

Take your ribbon and fold a lil part of it over the top like in photo 1 and crease it well with your finger nail or the edge of your closed scissors.

Once you have done that start rolling! You will be starting from the inside 'rosebud part' out. Right now you are making the rose bud the center of your rose, so roll that creased ribbon a few times to get your bud.

Once you have done that fold over some of your ribbon again and crease some more of your ribbon and roll, fold, crease and roll.

See how you keep on going and how your rose is building up? Hold tightly with your hand as you are rolling so your rose will not fall apart.

Put a few stitches in your rose to hold it together nice and tight.

These are perfect to add to the center of your 'Baby Blossoms' or your 'Lace Medallions'
